Service Delivery and Indicators

Project Assistant and steering committee meet consistently to further develop the ongoing commitment to the Women of the Murdi Paaki. It was anticipated that a final workshop for the year would be held in late November/December 09 but due to end of year work commitments and school holidays restricted Women's participation. Therefore it was clear a workshop in February after families settled into a normal routine would be the appropriate time frame.

However, constant phone and face to face contact where possible by the Project Assistant enabled the women to carry momentum over this period and allow the Project Assistant time to further negotiate with various existing program facilitators such as Love Bites and Mental Health First Aid who would be engaged to deliver training to the women.

It is envisaged that at this work shop the Women will collaborate on programs in which they perceive as important to be developed and delivered within their communities.

The date for the first workshop is 18th-21st February 2010 in Cobar. This location selected due to distance, accommodation and conference venues.

Strong Women's Project

Quarterly Performance Indicator Report Jul– Oct 2009

Overall:

Project Assistant and steering committee meet on a regular basis to drive the ongoing progression of the Strong Women's Project.

Red Dust Healing, which is a culturally designed program, was engaged with the Strong Women's Project originally to deliver two workshops which would focus on enhancing further dedication and strength within indigenous women for their communities. However, due to low attendance for various reasons, an additional two workshops were presented.

It was anticipated that strong women, who would be champions for children and families, be selected from each community in the Murdi Paaki region.

The intent of engaging Red Dust Healing was to have local women of the MP region train to deliver the program. In order to become trainers and have adequate knowledge of it's tools and structure, it is required of the participant to undertake the program twice and also undergo an additional "Train The Trainer" course.

Due to the confrontational basis of this program, many of the participants found the completion of the program was factored on the emotions of the individual. As some women are in different stages of their own healing, particular tools in the program allowed progression of growth to these women.

The women found that the Red Dust Healing program was relevant to their lives and their communities. The cultural foundations the program was delivered on proved to be both easy to comprehend and crucially important in their indigenous values.

Participants discussed that this program should also be aimed at children and families as well as those individuals who require culturally appropriate rehabilitation.

Also discussed were the needs of this program being delivered to government agencies. This would allow those disconnected from the environment in which they operate to possess a tool to better understand cultural differences in these communities and households.

Women are now being encouraged to give thought to programs to be developed for Women and Children in their communities around the knowledge gained through Red Dust Healing.

4. Number of research projects conducted

A written survey was conducted over the final workshop in Broken Hill to evaluate the overall delivery and reception of Red Dust Healing.

5. Number of women involved in developing localised action plans

In February 2010, the 35 women who engaged in the program will take part in a workshop where they will develop programs to be delivered within their own communities.

6. Positive contribution of the activities on Indigenous women's leadership, representation, safety, wellbeing and economic status

Red Dust Healing not only obliged appreciation and enhancement of the women's existing strength, skills and dedication, it gave our strong women of the Murdi Paaki region new hope to the revitalisation of their communities.

Through the gathering of these Strong Women commitment was established to support and encourage the bonding of all communities in the Murdi Paaki region.
