Brazil-born

Historical Background

Brazilian migration to Australia, similar to the other Latin American countries, has a recent history.

There was some early migration from Brazil to Australia during the 19th century, when English ships stopped at Rio de Janeiro en route to Australia.

By 1901 there were only 105 Brazil-born living in Australia.

The Brazilian population in Australia remained small until the a larger scale migration from Latin America started under the Australian Government’s assisted migration program in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

In the 1980s, towards the end of the military dictatorship, significant numbers migrated to Australia under the Humanitarian Program.

Migration from Brazil has increased since the early 2000s and compared to the first Brazilian immigrants who were from lower socio-economic backgrounds, most new arrivals are well-educated and from middle to higher socio-economic backgrounds. Many also arrived as students, particularly to learn English in a temperate climate similar to their own.
